SCOPE AND CONTENT
This collection contains 11 boxes of material pertaining to the development and activities of the Virginia Pilot Association from 1866 to 1984. The collection contains both internal documents of the Association as well as research, correspondence, photographs and publications about the Association from individual and media sources. The logs and records in this collection cover accounting and expense records, bylaws and official documents as well as shipping documents. The publications included in this collection offer information about the history of the Pilots as well as first hand travel accounts by Virginia Pilots. The Board of Directors Minutes encompasses business proposals, reprimands to pilots and budget allocation from 1903 until 1966. The photographs include portraits of vessels, captains, official press photographs during WWII, and unidentified photographs that range from beach scenes and linotype woodblock prints to WWI soldiers. The correspondences contained in this collection incorporate a range of subjects from complaint letters of Pilot misconduct and reprimands in the early 1900s to research requests from individuals and institutions from the 1940s to the 1980s. This collection also contains newspaper and magazine articles pertaining to pilot activity and political affiliations from 1909 to 1984. There are also many miscellaneous research notes in this collection pertaining to the history of the Virginia Pilots that have been used for personal interest as well as drafts for published and unpublished articles about the Pilots’ Association.

With the English colonization of Virginia came the need for facilitated navigation of its waters. In 1660 the Pilots Commission sought to remedy unnecessary navigation errors and accidents by assigning a pilot “to every stream a vessel might enter”. Local farmers and slaves soon took to the waters to fulfill the duties of becoming a pilot. Throughout the colonial period and well into the 19th century, Virginia Pilots served not only to aid in navigation of the constantly changing topography of the Chesapeake’s waters but also to take on courageous responsibilities during war. It was not until after the American Civil War, however, that two former Confederate veterans, Capt. Samuel W. Wood and Capt. Oscar E. Edwards decided to take action in the protection of personal and civil rights of pilots by establishing the Virginia Pilot Association in 1866. There were 22 original members of the Association and Capt. Wood presided over them without official title. In 1868 Capt. Edwards became the first official president of the Virginia Pilots Association. Under Edwards, the Association saw a move to steam powered vessels and new rules that allowed more extensive pilot participation in executive decisions. In 1882, Edwards led a lobby against a federal push to establish law against compulsory pilotage, which until that time had been decided by individual states. “Bitter experience has taught the commercial world that compulsory pilotage systems are generally necessary” (Jones). States rights were upheld in the Virginia Supreme Court and due to the tireless efforts of Edwards and the Virginia Pilot Association, compulsory pilotage continued for the state of Virginia. In 1919, a series of Tug Boat strikes affected businesses, including the Pilots of the Hampton Roads area. Under Pilot Association President William R. Boutwell, the Virginia Pilots took over the duties of the Tug Boats and saved Hampton Roads around $40,000 in losses. Testimonials were written by major shipping companies in praise of the pilots. Unfortunately the press remained relentless throughout the 1920s condemning the pilots on their seemingly harsh five year apprenticeship program, pilot fees and supposed nepotism. In 1924 the Norfolk and Portsmouth Chambers of Commerce required the Virginia Pilot Association to file extensive expense reports that were to be published in newspapers. The Pilots fought back at the discrimination shown to them, determined to demonstrate how diligent were the Pilots they employed and the honest system under which they worked. In WWII, the pilots heroically aided British and American ships into port to be repaired and maintained, sometimes in the cover of darkness and under the threat of U-boat attack. During the 1950s until the 1970s, major pilot activity waned and it was during this time that a comprehensive history of pilotage in Virginia was compiled with the intention of publication. In the 1980s, enthusiastic local historians and former pilots sought to reacquaint the public with the necessity and assiduousness of the Virginia Pilots through public demonstrations and local media publication.
